Paint the Rock for #NoDAPL

The Native American Law Student Association (NALSA) invites you to stand with the Standing Rock Tribe against the Dakota Access Pipeline (DAPL).

At the Rock (By MSU Auditorium)

9/22/16 at 8:00pm
For Painting and Group Picture of Solidarity

9/22-9/23
Volunteers needed for rock guarding

Contact: Lydia Locklear, lockle14@msu.edu

The Dakota Access Pipeline was originally set just above the city of Bismarck, North Dakota. However, after it was deemed too dangerous for the city’s water supply, it was relocated to pass the territory of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. The pipeline will cross numerous times over the Missouri River, which is the only water supply for the Reservation. Tribes that fall along the pipeline were never consulted as required by the National Historic Preservation Act and in violation of the 1851 Fort Laramie Treaty. Today, more than 100 tribes are camped in Cannonball, ND to peacefully protect the water. A highway barricade was set up leading into the camps, an act the ACLU has denounced as being in violation of First Amendment rights. Recently, video emerged showing a private security company using mace and attack dogs on peaceful protesters. Protesters have been arrested, as well as journalists who have been reporting on these events.